21 Maxwell Street.

Glasgow July 20. 1867.

Dear Friend,

183

I received your unexpected note from Edinburgh. I fear you will over-do yourself with work. I greatly enjoyed the meeting yesterday forenoon, and your address part of last night also. The two first speakers were too wordy – Main & Fraser.

My old friend Robert Rae, Secretary to the National Temperance League, of which Mr Paddie is one of the active members,

sends me the enclosed
P.S. which I think it best to send on at once. The Crystal Palace Gathering, to which he refers, is one of the finest, and far moral power, as grand a one, as is held in England, or the Irish.
Temperance. Our public friends, try, if possible, and be present.
I feel certain you would enjoy it.
Dear Mate, Yours with heartfelt esteem, William Logan.

P. S.

I have sent to Clay's
papers to Mr Nichol,
and many other friends.
I take it for granted that Mrs Lincoln or S. H. Woodward will attend to yours in this matter, as I would gladly do so. W. L.